WOMEN'S FORUM
FOR THE ECONOMY & SOCIETY

Building the future with women's vision 2010, a new year for a new women's voice...

Barry Schwartz

Professor of psychology at Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania, USA

I have the hope that women are less single-minded than men, and thus more likely to be concerned about the role their activities play in making the world a better place.

Christine Loh

CEO, Civic Exchange, Hong Kong Women talk about things men seldom talk about - i.e. we talk about women!!! Men don't talk about women and women's condition. Thus, women's voices and visions will always be distinct.

Melanne Verveer

US Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues

We need diverse voices, of both women and men, in business, politics, the economy, and society: not only to ensure all interests and viewpoints are represented, but also to improve the quality of the collective thought process.

Lee Stein

Managing Director, Virtual Group LLC and Founder, Chairman and CEO, Prize Capital, USA

Women should emerge as the leaders of creating a new economy based on sustainability.

Ndidi Okonkwo Nwuneli

Founder of Leap Africa, Nigeria

Most women are natural nurturers. Our distinctiveness is often reflected in our ability to always consider "the other" when we make decisions that have political, economic or social consequences. Our visions and the implementation of these visions often tend to be more balanced and equitable, with fewer negative side effects.

Zainab Salbi

Founder and CEO, Women for Women International, Iraq

It is time for women to take the audacious step of envisioning a new future, a new world for our children, for our earth, and for our humanity. We need to think big, dream, articulate, envision, and share our dreams and bring others to our dreams.
